

INSTRUCTIONS FROM GOOLE TRANSLATE

A banner prompting the user to translate the page will be shown at the top of the page when a user's browser user interface language is different than the language of the web page.

When a user translates a page, the website translator sends the text of the web page to Google's translation service and displays the translated text without reloading or redirecting users from the page.

If the user clicks on a link in the translated page and the linked web page has the website translator embedded in it, the linked web page will also be automatically translated for the user. Otherwise, the original web page without translations will be shown.

For normal web pages, Google may log a small portion of the text for translation quality purposes but not in a way that is associated with their Google Account. The contents of secure pages are submitted and translated using a secure connection, and Google will not log any of the text.

SOURCE: See for more detailed instructions the following link:

<http://translate.google.com/support/>